

It's rare for a fine artist to invite you to stand upon their work. Galleries frown upon simply touching a canvas, much less the treading of bare feet or the slumber of the family pet.

For 20 years, Edgar Podzemny has asked his clients to do just that.

Though he is a painter from Amarillo and she is originally from Wales, Edgar and Kelly Podzemny met while traveling in Hawaii. They continued their journey together, exploring the world and gaining a unique shared perspective on culture and art. While visiting India, they became enamored of the tradition of weaving and saw the potential of wool & silk first hand.

The Podzemny's were inspired by their experiences to venture into the rug industry themselves, eventually leading Edgar and Kelly to found Madison Lily Rugs, which is named for their eldest daughter.

Madison Lily Rugs is dedicated to more than the creation of beautiful woven artifacts – the company is dedicated to improving the rug buying process itself.
